The press unanimously subordinate all other war news, not excepting the Turkish attempt to cross the Bosnian, to give prominence to the German move from Berlin, while the Foreign Office statement, following quickly on the publication of the German move, indicates that the Government

We certainly are not going to die of famine."

The Right Hats for Little Girls

Beaded Crown, Flowers and Lace in Close Style

Soft Feathers on a Full Crown

A Bonnet of Broadcloth

Ribbon Simply Trims a Velvet Hat

A Figured Silk Mushroom

NOT many decades ago it was the custom to reproduce in the dress of children the styles of adults. Poor little children! Have you a daguerrotype of grandmother at home? Look at it. See the little 4-year-old girl with a weird bonnet and plume perched upon her head, and the ridiculous basque effect in her party dress. See her with her hands folded in front, quite as her mother did. In fact, see the little girl in the disguise of an older woman's make-up. But we have changed all that. Little girls have a milliner of their own. There are right hats displayed in every up-to-date worth-while shop, and mothers can either purchase them or duplicate them at home.

Here is a group of hats for little girls, showing variety, becomingness and style. Do you like the hat in mushroom-type of figured silk? Its buckram frame is covered with figured taffeta, all color notes being sounded in the pattern. Around the crown line is a one-inch band of contrasting material, on which, at intervals of two inches, are placed satin cherries. There is a plain facing under the mushroom. A dark blue velvet hat is simply trimmed with blue ribbon in a brighter shade. The edge of the brim is turned up around the little face, and the full crown gives plenty of room for the curls underneath. The ribbon is wound around the crown and tied in a flat bow at one side, with two ends. That is all; yet there is style and appropriate simplicity for a little girl. This model is easily duplicated in any color.

Clipped ostrich feathers form the trimming on a blue silk shape. This is a full-top mushroom, and its turned-up edge has a brown binding, which can be of fur, any of the imitation fur cloths, or grosgrain ribbon. This hat is excellent if the ostrich-feather band be adjustable, and if other changes, such as flowers or stenciled scarf, can be used.

There is a disposition this year to use black and white in the millinery for little girls, and, surely, the model with the white dahlias pleads for itself. It has a straight wide band over which shows a beaded velvet top. The white flowers are placed around the band, alternately at the bottom and top. A frill of lace finishes the under brim. For a close style this model suggests many possibilities in combination of fabric and flowers.

Last in the collection is a peach-basket model of broadcloth. It suggests completing a set. It is small enough to be made of the odd pieces left from a cloth coat. The crown of cloth is not full, and most of the hat has a slanting brim. There is a double binding around the edge of cloth, and the model stands for smart simplicity. It is practical and at the same time elegant. It also should inspire a maker to duplicate it in fabric to match a coat. Surely the atrocious style of waving pink plumes and many frills of lace, which always get unpardonably dirty in a short time, should be relegated to the background.

The American mother has always captured the laurels for dressing her child in appropriate simplicity. These hats should crown her efforts.
